

Comelec close to awarding P11.3-B contract for automation

By Marlon Ramos

AFTER THE LOVE SURVIVING BEHIND the P11.3 billion poll automation project landed 24 of 26 criteria, the Commission on Elections (Comelec) last night said it was close to awarding the huge contract—if anyone deserved to win it.

The move must still be justified by the present secretarial order (PSO) issued by COMELEC.

Says merger done in haste by dictation, not by consultation

By Fe Ramos

THE MERGER OF THE RULING PARTIES LAKAS-CMD AND Kabisig ng Malayang Pilipino (Kampi) was done in "undue haste" and "by dictation, not by consultation," former President Fidel V. Ramos said yesterday.

Opposition: It's merger of 'trapos'; it is a 'Palaka'

By Michael Lina Ulloa

"KORAL"

That one word captured the opposition's reaction to the so-called marriage of the two biggest political parties in the country. The opposition also said the political union would not transfer any votes to ensure the victory of administration candidates in 2010.

Sen. Benigno Aquino III said the merger of Lakas-CMD and the Kabisig ng Malayang Pilipino (Kampi) was a union of traps (traditional politicians).

Ramos, a presidential aspirant and the president of the United Party, told reporters that the name of the new party was Palaka (Tagalog for "Threatening Lakas or Kampi").

Asked to explain, he replied with a long-suffering "Korral."

Sen. Francis Pangilinan said that as statesmen knew they packaged themselves, administration officials would be hard-pressed to convince the voters that they deserve to meet voters.

"I don't know why it's the tendency or culture of administration leaders to put up things in a hurry... Pure (all) except one exception (in what happened), pure inclusion (all in haste)," the chair emeritus of the old Lakas said at a press conference in his office in Makati City.

"Why the undue haste? Is it because of a trip to Korea?" Ramos said at a reception in President Ma's office. Arroyo's scheduled trip to South Korea on May 30-June 2.

He said he learned about the Thursday launch of the merger only from "a fax message from a friend."

Ramos, who arrived from the United States at dawn on Thursday, skipped the Lakas-Kampi CMD office at the Manila Hotel, where he was to have declared an inaugural speech.

He said he was informed that he was to be the inaugural speaker at the launch only on the day itself.

Ramos admitted that talks on the Lakas-Kampi merger had started in 2008.

He said he had "supported" the merger since then, but had believed that he wanted proper consultation with all stakeholders, "so as to be able to

FOUNDING FATHER FOUNDERING Former President Fidel V. Ramos, Lakas founder and chair emeritus, raises some pointed questions during a press conference in his Makati office last night. What happens next to the old Lakas and Kampi parties, each of which is accredited with the Comelec? What happens to the international character of Lakas-CMD, which is affiliated with the Christian Democrats International. Why was he informed that he was an inaugural speaker on the day itself?

No party cracks, just 'birth pains'

EMERGING BOYS OF LAKAS-KAMPI CMD yesterday made light of the boycott of the merger ceremony by key administration allies, and declared that the new ruling party would survive without some of them.

Prosper Pichay, the vice president for Makabansa and spokesperson of the old Lakas-CMD, acknowledged that the absence of such officials at the ceremonies for Reps. Len Villegas and the Thursday launch of the merger was part of the new party's birth pains.

"There's no such thing as a perfect party. That happens to us," Pichay, a former representative of Surigao del Sur, said on the phone.

Mindanao teachers stick to English in camp

SMILING, THE SECOND-GRADE TEACHER rested from a game that challenged her to talk in English language skills. Colina Lacharman of the Manila Elementary School in Lungsod, Surigao del Sur, traveled all the way to Marikina, Cebu, to join 132 other grade school teachers from Mindanao in a 12-day camp that promised to help them improve their English in time for the school opening in June.

The English Language Camp helped the teacher-empower practice their English language skills using educational games and other activities on persuasive speaking, interviewing, using idioms, reading and retelling stories, creating and creating scenarios, hosting, debating, creative writing, role playing, conversation, and vocabulary building.

It also improved their oral, listening, reading, writing, teaching methodology, and computer skills using experiential and learner-centered approaches.

The camp was organized by the United States Peace Corps, Taclo (Taclo) Mindanao Program in cooperation with the Education Quality and Access for Learning and Livelihood Skills (EQALLS) Project of the US Agency for International Development (USAID).

Christmas in May for 2 lotto bettors

By John M. Asencio

WHILE MOST OF THEIR COUNTRYMEN are queuing for jobs and thinking up various money-making schemes, two Filipinos will be celebrating in May for having the knack for picking lucky numbers.

It was a random but lucky choice of numbers for the 21-year-old subagent who won half of the P118 million jackpot in the 49 Superlotto draw on Thursday night.

The bettor, who bought her ticket in San Mesa, Bulacan, had been playing the popular game of chance for only a week and did not even have a favorite combination of numbers.

2 more wedding guests in Zambales get A(H1N1)

By Don Pazibugan

IF YOU'VE HAD ONE WEDDING TIME, ON hindsight, they probably should have skipped.

The number of confirmed cases of influenza A(H1N1)—more commonly known as swine flu—in the country has climbed to 14 as the Department of Health reported four more cases yesterday, eight days after the first case was confirmed.

Worldwide, the number of cases has soared past 13,000 with the number of deaths nearing 100.

Health Secretary Francisco Duque III said two of the new cases in the Philippines—a 42-year-old woman and a 28-year-old man—were at a May 17 wedding in Zambales attended by a Taiwanese mother and her daughter, who were later found carrying the virus upon their return to Taipei.

That same night of the 14 confirmed cases were present at the wedding, according to the Department of Health. The DOH previously said there were about 50 people at the wedding.

The rest of the confirmed cases in the country had traveled abroad, including two of the new cases: a 7-year-old girl and a 19-year-old woman who had returned from travel in the United States.

Twelve of the 14 confirmed cases are Filipinos, including the four new ones, according to the DOH.

Doque said all of the 14 confirmed cases had shown "relatively mild symptoms and all are responding positively to treatment" with the anti-viral drug

Iran says US behind deadly mosque blast

TEHRAN—IRANIAN OFFICIALS ON FRIDAY accused the US of hiding those behind a suicide bombing of a Shiite mosque in southeastern Iran that killed 23 people and linked the attack to next month's presidential vote.

"Three people involved in the attack were killed," said Ali Akbar Mojtahedi, deputy provincial governor of the Islamic Revolutionary Guards Corps, the Islamic Republic's main paramilitary force. "The attack was a suicide bombing of a Shiite mosque in southeastern Iran that killed 23 people and linked the attack to next month's presidential vote."

"According to the information obtained, they were killed by America and the agents of the Islamic Republic," Mojtahedi said. Iranian Minister also blamed "foreign forces" for Thursday's attack.

Minister said a media center opened with gunshots from inside a mosque in the city of Shiraz, the capital, and that the attack was a suicide bombing of a Shiite mosque in southeastern Iran that killed 23 people and linked the attack to next month's presidential vote.

Iran has in the past blamed US and British agents based in neighboring Iraq and Afghanistan for launching attacks on Iranian protesters with significant US military participation.

Shiite Muslims comprise the majority of Iran's population.

All Iranian officials, the province governor and the provincial assembly, said the attack was part of a plan by "American and Iranian" to destabilize the "Islamic" government by the election, considering the election is the next presidential election.

It was quoted by the official IRNA news agency that Thursday as blaming "American" for the explosion.

"It was a suicide attack and the South was exploded by a suicide bomber," Mojtahedi said, adding that some after the explosion "members of a terrorist group who wanted to go out of the Islamic Republic were arrested."

"The members of the terrorist group intended to explode bombs in some other areas of the Islamic Republic, but they have been arrested due to the efforts of the provincial intelligence office."

Iran's intelligence agency said the "suicide bomber" exploded the bomb in the mosque's main hall.

A list released by the agency, however, showed the names of 13 local victims. It did not identify the remaining eight victims.

According to IRNA, the Islamic Republic's main paramilitary force, the Islamic Revolutionary Guards Corps, said the attack had been "premeditated" and "well known" as premeditated in the name of the mosque. "The attack was premeditated and well known as premeditated in the name of the mosque," the Islamic Revolutionary Guards Corps said. "The attack was premeditated and well known as premeditated in the name of the mosque."

BSP seen cutting rates further to boost economy

Economists start revising '09 growth forecasts lower

By Rensel W. Geronimo

A NEW YORK-BASED THINK TANK AND A SINGAPORE-based bank said the Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas (BSP) is expected to continue easing its key policy rates after the Philippine economy grew far slower than expected at only 0.4 percent in the first quarter.

Global sources said the BSP was likely to cut its overnight lending and borrowing rates further following Thursday's reduction of 25 basis points.

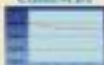

Global Sources bank note that, in an unusually adjusted, narrow, last-quarter figure was the worst result since the country's deep recession in the mid-1980s, while leading economic indicators pointed to continued weakness.

"This emerging economic crisis calls for greater support from both monetary and fiscal prudence through monetary and fiscal management now directly more difficult with the policy mix requiring careful restraint," said Global Sources.

PHILIPINIAN WORLD MAGNETIC CITY, and the New World Group have just launched Manhattan Heights, the third phase of the development in Manhattan Garden City.

MANHATTAN GARDEN CITY

An idea whose time has come

By Charles E. Bales

EVERYBODY TOUTS GREEN AND sustainable development today, but very few could really boast like Megaworld Corp., whose ongoing development at the heart of Alabaster Center in Quezon City is showing clearly that they have to build a community where people could live comfortably with their environment.

The garden-inspired, master-planned Manhattan Garden City is, indeed, fast taking shape with the design and planning of the first phase—called Manhattan Heights—well under way.

"With the record-breaking pace that we have achieved with the Manhattan Parkview and Manhattan Parkview (all sold out in just five years), we are optimistic that the Manhattan Heights will also perform excellently," announced Anthony Chinnayagui Yu, president of Megaworld Central Properties Inc.

The project that will be located at the Alabaster Center is a transit-oriented development (TOD) and is set to provide at least 100,000 to 150,000 jobs.

Four towers
The Manhattan Heights will feature two high-rise towers that will add more than 1,000 units to Manhattan Garden City.

The first tower, rising 20 stories, will have 400 residential units, all featuring balconies. Unit prices start at P2.5 million for a studio, P3.7 million for a 1-bedroom, and P5.5 million for a 2-bedroom suite.

"From these price packages, it is clear that we are offering value to upper-income homebuyers as well as young professionals, students and investors. The development

CONVENIENCE: As a transit-oriented development, Manhattan Heights will offer residents easy access to major shopping and dining delights at the ground floor levels of Manhattan Heights.

100% rate for a transit-oriented development. Manhattan Garden City is the first and only one that boasts of a TOD and MRT station. This, residents can see with any point of the entire nation's network.

accessibility to the university hall in Manila (Manila, the fully operational Light Rail Transit Line 2) and its proximity to the University of the Philippines and Ateneo de Manila University also makes the Manhattan Heights very attractive for students," added Yu.

Sky garden

"The Manhattan Heights is the first Megaworld Corp. project to feature sky gardens, a concept that is set to bring the Manhattan City Garden's green developments to the next level," informed Yu.

The sky gardens, which are actually also known as sky decks, are the placement of outdoor swimming pools, lawns and not only will the building's interior naturally but also the air and the pollution of the surrounding area.

"The major plants, large fountains, and trees, lawns, and water features that we have already placed on the ground floor (fourth level) will be complemented by the sky gardens," explained Yu.

These green features are also in the Manhattan City Garden's "sustainable" concept where one may be able to hear the birds' chirps and relaxing sounds that these green spaces provide.

"Combine this with the high-rise and modern living, the Manhattan Heights is indeed an attractive proposition," added Yu.

SKY garden level is lush, green oasis, as just one of many ways to bring nature to the city.

ANY OTHER new features? Big lights are another new feature at Mosaic Garden City, which is being developed as a green building. The city is also planning for the future of the city.

A 'green'

high-rise development

By Charles E. Wilson

WITH THE THIRD PHASE OF THE Mosaic Garden City now under way, MegaWorld Corp. is set to show the country how high-rise structures should be built the "green" way.

"Many of us think of a city as a place that provides a kind of sanctuary where we can rest and rejuvenate. With what we are developing, we will show that high-rise structures could also be agents of sustainability and green living," explained Anthony Chikara, president of MegaWorld Central Properties Inc.

For the first time in the country, Mosaic Garden City features green roofs across the five high-rise towers will be decked with layers of vegetation.

Partially covered by a pergola, the garden will feature palm trees, vibrant flowering shrubs and other plants.

"These are not only for beautification purposes but they will serve to alleviate the environmental problems encountered in dense urban habitats and also to encourage sustainable development," said Yu.

He said these rooftop gardens will help mitigate the negative impacts of cities on the environment by lowering energy, improving air quality, reducing the water management, absorbing solar radiation, creating a natural habitat for birds and insects, as well as creating natural retreats.

Popular

"This concept is very popular in European countries especially Germany, as the United States, our goal is to bring this concept to the Chinese City Hall," said Yu.

Yu added that other communities around the world face many challenges related to health and environment of their residents.

First thing: The Garden City offers Mosaic Garden City residents a sustainable living experience.

"That is the city is building up uncontrollably because of the increasing number of urban infrastructure, increasing traffic, air pollution and the loss of greenery. The increase in vegetation that we will incorporate here should reduce air temperature, resulting in energy savings for our residents," said Yu.

Yu said MegaWorld Corp. is committed to the preservation of the environment and is committed to bringing green buildings to Mosaic Garden City.

"Indeed, urban developers like MegaWorld Corp. are increasingly recognizing the importance of trees and other vegetation beyond their visual contribution to the cityscape. We hope that developers and investors will respond increasingly well to our commitment," he explained.

Indeed, with what MegaWorld Corp. is doing at Mosaic Garden City, Yu is confident they may be able to influence other developers to do the same things and create a more healthy and comfortable communities.

Unparalleled lifestyle

By Charles E. Salas

WITH THE LAUNCH OF THE MARINATAS HEIGHTS, the third phase of the Marikina Garden City, Megaworld Corp. initiated the last single-phase development.

The four high-rise towers will also carry the entire development's Art Deco look. "The design goes well with all the gardens and landscaping that we will place all over Marikina Garden City," said Anthony Chaves, president of Megaworld Central Properties Inc.

He mentioned that each tower will have uniquely designed sky gardens that occupy the upper most level.

On the other hand, the garden decks or rooftop of the fourth level (amenity deck) will offer numerous jogging tracks, basketball and recreational area, swimming pool with kiddie pool, a spa and even a hydrotherapy pool.

Connected

"Megaworld Corp. remains committed to providing environment-friendly initiatives with regard to our amenities," explained Yu. He added that future residents will have many opportunities for recreation as there will be a gym for those who want to stay in shape, a pool and spa for those who want to relax.

"Those who just like to enjoy the view, need a break or desire to enjoy will have no reason to complain as there is a view deck to do this within the amenity deck," offered Yu. Besides of Marikina Garden City's location at the Alameda Corridor, residents of the Marikina Heights will be able to enjoy easy access to the Light Rail Transit Line 2 along Ayala Boulevard and the Metro-Rail Transit 3 along EDSA.

Connected

"The Marikina Garden City is the first and only residential development connected to both lines. In other words, our residents are just a quick drive away from these major transportation hubs should they want to go to other parts of Metro Manila," explained Yu.

All the buildings, including the four towers of the Marikina Heights, will be interconnected by a 729-meter walkway that Megaworld Corp. will construct.

Introducing the four towers are within the Alameda Corridor, future residents of Marikina Heights will be able to take advantage of all the shopping and dining destinations within the area. Gateway Mall, Parkland's 3M, Singapore, 43 Mall and Tennis & Pools.

The ground level of the Marikina Heights will also have rows of Spanish-style cottages.

Entertainment

"The first of the four towers, a 28-story residential high-rise, will have 626 units, each featuring a balcony that gives spectacular view of the Alameda Corridor and across the Manila Bay coast," said Yu.

The balcony will also enable Marikina Heights future residents to enjoy the relaxing view of the amenity deck below.

According to Yu, each unit will have private access to some of modern lifestyle conveniences like lines for telephone, WiFi as well as hot and cold water supply.

"At Marikina Heights, you will realize that it's worth to commit with nature but at the same time enjoy all the amenities that modern life offers. We're building a completely balanced lifestyle," described Yu.

MODERN lifestyle interior perspective of a master bedroom at Marikina Heights.

WONDERFUL views. All units at Marikina Heights feature balconies, through which residents can enjoy the scenic wonders of Alameda Corridor.

FAMILY viewing. The entire family will enjoy the garden decks at year long at Marikina Garden City.

GROUNDBREAKING in June 2007, Marikina Garden City's phase 1 broke ground, led by the Philippine Charity Inc. Chairman Benito Pangasinan, Megaworld Group CEO Jorge Arana, Megaworld Corp. Chairman and COO Andrew Yu, Quezon City Mayor Sonny Belmonte and Metro Manila Development Authority Chair Bayard Rustan.

FAST track. As of this moment, the first two towers of Marikina Heights are under construction while the other two are in 30 percent completion.

Lindsay Lohan's ex is a smash in new Manila club

By Wengie Collage

IT WAS A HOT MAY 22ND evening as the crowd poured in to the newly opened LAS night behind the Mall of Asia. The crowd had been up since then but Manila's night clubbers didn't mind being out late on the party. After all, throughout the day, there were many Samanatha Hansen sightings on Facebook. Internet sites say that Lindsay Lohan might be with her.

Of course, it was Broughton's late after all, says again because Lindsay Lohan was in where then Manila. According to her, she can go to be in other countries, maybe, but she would have just as intrigued to find out the kind of music that the Los Angeles-based DJ would play for everyone.

The club's location was less described as much. But various, dark walls, good lighting, good sound system—what the lights turn low and the DJ starts mixing, LAS is as good as they come. The music area is elevated over the dance floor, something a gladiator arena or roller skating rink. It's a good move because it gives the audience a good view of the DJ.

Outside is a patio with two bar area and a small DJ playing different tunes. It's a chance to get fresh air and still be part of the party. It's something that and lots of Mikan and The Rose come after.

Why I quit Plurk

I reached the height of addiction

By Pam Pader

I SHOULD TO MYSELF I wouldn't sign up. It was a promise I kept for months and months, even after one friend after another started joining Plurk.com. Plurk, a microblogging and social networking website that allows you to post short updates and links, had become my new best friend.

Dancing bananas

But I still refused to sign up—even though they couldn't stop talking about Plurk when I was around. There were so much talk about banana parties and dancing bananas and I couldn't resist at all. I couldn't help because all my friends had all my desire to join in private. And while I had friends who were nice enough to join the most interesting party on Plurk during the conversations, it just wasn't enough.

Still, I held my ground. I already had my hands full with my blog, a music, lifestyle, and friends blog. I wasn't even on Facebook yet or on Twitter.

I wrote this in my lifestyle blog in January: "There's no on Plurk. And this will

And while I had friends who were nice enough to join the most interesting party on Plurk during the conversations, it just wasn't enough.

principle or just being out there."

Plurk plunge

Soon after I posted that blog entry, I finally caved. I signed up as YohanaSison and took the big Plurk plunge.

I started to get into it, really into it. Plurk was the first thing I checked when I woke up in the morning. Plurk was the last thing I checked before going to bed at night. When I wasn't in front of the computer, I was on Mobile Plurk, checking my phone credits by posting Plurk from the boring "mashed potato" screen in the web. "Tubooches" is carrying on events (see home) and creating other people's posts. Every time something happened...if someone said something about me I'd have a total accident—my internet was to be used to post Plurk about it. It got so bad that people started calling me by my Plurk name. Tubooches is cute, sure, but I still like my real name more.

Because I was posting regularly and people kept responding to my posts, my status points continued to rise. Plurk status points when you are inactive, when people don't reply to you and when people remove you from their friends' lists. The higher your status is, the more attention you are given, more so, high or lower status you to modify your Plurk posts more.

Plurk had become the first page I open every time I go online—and this page stayed open all day.

Addiction

During the height of my Plurk addiction, none of my friends deleted their Plurk accounts only to come back. The thought of deleting my account didn't even enter my mind then. I was living my dream life.

I refused to admit it but it soon started happening. My thoughts came in 140-character snippets. Writing became a struggle. Plurk had become my life, a distraction. I was constantly getting alerts on new posts and responses to my Plurk that I took the time to check a single article. I was also spending so much money on Mobile Plurk because I couldn't stop checking it. I will never mention this again but yes, I was even taking Mobile Plurk to the bathroom.

I reached Plurk Nirvana about four months after I first signed up. It was also around that time that I realized I needed Plurk to be a success. In 140-character snippets, I even joined Twitter just to see what was going on there but soon realized I wouldn't get anywhere. I started ranting—but when I have as many short posts following me from around the world just because my last name was Plurk.

But after one weekend that made me realize that I was once again living in a world of my own, the very same reason that made me quit living for a time, I made the decision to quit Plurk.

That Sunday morning, in front of three people who were all Plurk addicts, I got ready to delete my Plurk account. I signed in for the very last time, checked the "I confirm that my account will be deleted and this action cannot be undone" box and clicked on the delete button.

Just like that, Tubooches was gone.

Eye type Plurk

The kindest thing is I don't miss it at all.

Now, there were some great things about Plurk. It made doing surveys for articles a breeze, being aware of everything that was going on—both my friends' lives or current affairs—was a snap and it was so easy to organize snippets.

I love all these things but I love my time and my privacy more.

I wrote articles on multi-plurk now. And I've been having all these beautiful, easy and interesting moments with people. I don't need to immediately write anything about them to 140-character snippets.

My partner to crime said to me the other day "Since you quit Plurk you no longer spend much time online."

"Yeah, because there's nothing to do. I check my e-mails, check Facebook, post my Flickr pics and that's it."

I like that. I like that I've been able to work, hang out with people (without mindlessly checking the status) and the few days doing some things of mine.

And for now, when I feel the need to give people about updates about myself, I always have my Facebook status. But most of the time, I just let the person in my mind tell to me.

Online choices, choices

So many online services and so little time

How Much It Took
By [Name]

ONLINE LIFE USED to be so simple. We had one e-mail account, we used only one messaging service, and Facebook was the only networking site around.

And then life began. I don't know when or how it started, but all of a sudden, we just became disconnected with our online presence, and we started appreciating the value of the things we were doing and looking at online.

When it comes to messaging, for example, we have a post when having just one account wasn't enough. Whether we were subscribed to Google Talk or the now-popular Yahoo! Messenger, we found ourselves maintaining several accounts, after all, having multiple ones meant several usernames in order to use various tools or even promotions, right?

Let's be honest. We can't tell you for our supply of e-mail accounts, create another before we finally use it, or even add our address (and we can't add our backup account; create yet another before we add a profile or an address somewhere third because we want an even more "personal" account for only close friends; and create yet another before we add some significant item here, like a baby bookshelf item number in our "family" list for very "personal" notes that no significant other knows the password to. And then, we never forget to create one with seemingly random numbers and up descriptions of ourselves (hairbrush, perfume, girlfriend, probably, which we never let change up images for potential other halves, if you want to be paid for it).

OK, and these are just for one messaging service. Because there are others out there, and we don't complicate to connect with all our friends and family members, we sign up with other services as well. Like, for example, we create one with a few friends and family members, we sign up with other services as well. Like, for example, we create one with a few friends and family members, we sign up with other services as well.

And then there are the e-mail accounts. From all the available ones out there, we normally pick just one to use for correspondence. But then they offer us a new one. Gmail, for example, has bigger free mail to more than 100 MB, while Yahoo! Mail has a free 100 MB mailbox. So we create a new one, but then we realize that we already have one, so we delete it. And then we realize that we already have one, so we delete it.

More than one, it seems like we were collecting a big check of our day online—or in the case, to be honest, and while most of us log on for work, it is so easy to get distracted and lost chat, surf or tweet away. Technology might have advanced the way we connect, work or spend our free time, but it's just as easy to get lost in the same way. So we create a new one, but then we realize that we already have one, so we delete it.

WHILE ALL 350MW 96440 Spanish food items like we've been introduced long enough to know how to be served into our own traditional cuisine that what about Portugal? It might not be Portuguese but it's a delicious cuisine to eat in South America. In Manila, Portugal's most well-known dish is the cod fish (Bacalhau), which is a lot of fish and potatoes, which is a lot of fish and potatoes.

Though, being the Western part of Europe, it's considered more exotic by the Japanese and has been popularized as a seafood delicacy. Portuguese food is a lot of chicken from different countries like their evolved carden such as the spicy chicken which is usually used in chicken dishes. Other than the food, they also have a lot of their traditional, which is made of different spices, and for their good wine. Indeed, Portuguese wine has been recognized since the time of the Roman Empire and has been associated with the god Bacchus, the god of wine.

'Bruno' highlights summer comedies again plays a character from his TV series, "The Mindy Project," inside the real world, where divorcee Larry Charles' camera captures his interactions with seemingly unknown citizens.

The culture clash of his gay Australian fashion reporter might be even greater than that of his Brooklyn journalist.

Coming on June 5 with best friends and new teenage is "The Hunches," about friends who find themselves trying to put the pieces together after a wild Las Vegas night. Starring Bradley Cooper, Ed Helms and Zach Galifianakis in goonsies looking for their missing friend. "It feels to be a simple detective format, almost like a mystery, like a Hardy boy puzzle," explained Helms. "You're trying to figure out exactly what happened."

Chance

Such comedies afford an actor and comedian a chance to be a stand-out just in a crowd. Look through.

"The Hunches" is the first major movie role for Helms, who produced from "The Daily Show" to "The Office," and, now, in more movies. This summer, he also has parts in "The Good, the Bad, the Ugly" and in "Night at the Museum: Battle of the Smithsonian."

"The Good," which is produced by himself and John McKay, stars Jeremy Piven, Ving Rhames and Justin Smith. Other anticipated releases:

• "Tropic" (May 29): Mike Judge's comedy stars Mike Koolha, Ben Affleck, Jason Bateman and Kristen Bell.

• "Wonder Woman" (June 12): Woody Allen returns to New York in his comedy.

• "Freaky Friday" (The Warner brothers) starts the recent line of films that hit "Step Up."

Julia Roberts makes smashing comeback

Re Minister U. Thore

ELIZA FLORENTE IS ONE COOL, 35-year-old. At the height of her fame and close to the biggest female star in Hollywood, she never on leave from her stellar career to start a family. Other moms would hesitate to clock in on such a hot show. They don't. Julia Roberts.

In the popular and sustained series "give up" studies for a few years, interviewing urban managers found themselves to make their bid for government stardom. If one of them had been successful, federal official crackdown would have been entirely compromised.

Rising stars
Something great did come to the fair and shined up stars' point, like Angelina Jolie, Megan Fox and Kristen Stewart ("Twilight"). But, none of them was able to clinch the top spot (owned by Roberts), so when she resumed making movies, the field was still wide open for her to achieve.

But, most of last season's injuries perhaps have been additive, as the team has been looking forward to full first major winter-back performance. After a long week, that's finally come to pass.

the present dollar, "Tuplets," where the father with British theme first, Chris Owen, under Tom

In "Exploit," Roberts and others play former top-flight sales reps now in the employ of top business managers who pay them a lot of money to engage in corporate espionage.

Spectacularly, they are listed to benefit not the top-secret formulae of a new product that's expected to make billions of dollars for the corporation that is the first to launch it. As the corporate-sponsorship pilot matures, however, the two spend less on crowdfundering each other at every turn, making overruns—the film's losses are included—question the credibility of everything they say and do. —The movie isn't about "truth" or whether success should be rewarded; it's about success, period.

To complicate things further, Roberts and Owen's characters go beyond on a personal, economic level, as well as, how do lower and middle who can't even catch other manage to make sense of their professional and personal lives? The answer to that key question is what makes "Dignity" a fascinatingly sensitive, intimate experience.

COMMENTS: Under ordinary business expectations, this is a very good deal.

The good news is that, after five years, sales in movie production, Roberts' postcard line, his hair-care and money-lending, is still addressing an aging challenge that's big enough to engage a major star's financial acumen.

Back of all, the counterbalancing actions comes in "Diagnosis": that don't materialize and disappear in a flash and, moreover, obviously suffer from over-precision, to the point of being, in some instances, downright ludicrous. Hollywood's Queen Ju Ju is back under the no-longer-than-30-minute constraint!

Supply and demand

By Robert C. Anderson

I THINK THAT THE COMMITTEE members who blamed his sexual indiscretions with some of his girlfriends to a fault. He is ungenerously and guilty of treachery of the most unpolitic kind, and his willing sexual partners are the victims. After all, there were private moments that should have remained in the con- fides of his bedchamber.

Whoever distributed the doctor's annual reminders is also a dedicated Cub—and the two issues overlap. The contemporary rider has become the talk of the union. The woman has since covered the faded female. Money, my collection is getting into the act. Is, what else is new? After all, we belong to a union that got out of trouble over many years in protest national issues. Yes, some Money Magazine has been forgotten too...and after Christmas too.

Biggest victims

Yes, the market is the spotlight has no doubt been richened. But the biggest victim is the public, especially the youth who are getting wrong signals from the pop culture, the media and the market. Why has such a scandal become a matter of national concern?

ion. If there were no supply, there'd be no demand. To begin with, if customers didn't find their sexual proclivities there'd be nothing to supply the growing demand for such reads. In the not too distant past, it was considered wrong to produce pornography. Now, such practices have been legitimized as "adult entertainment." (LHJ: Impressos)

Wrong signals
Left: as yet down to the root of the matter: the more significant the wrong signals sent by many inhibitory interneurons, GABA and neuropeptides produce an inhibitory signal, a signal that is interpreted as a threat. They mean that what happens between ascending inputs inside the brain is a threat to the system.

It's the "person" who makes those choices that is the issue. Does their speech make assumptions like "they're better than us," or "they're not as good as we are"? Are all consuming individuals, not personally adults, free to do as they please, or being in their own happens inside the kid, considered, it's as long as they're kept away from each parent? What if they say a sentence or a girl's best? What if one of the consuming adults were not?

We should have students see any don't "strategic" promoted sex. Besides, these days, there's also an economic factor that contributes to the probability that's becoming the norm among institutions, who catered an sexual lifestyle and the consequences thereof—but not this impressionable ones, who were afraid to get involved in sexual pregnancy in single parents?

and tactics, it is true, I like neither the content nor the use. However, powerful media should not exploit the situation, in cases politicians have. Instead, we all should put these events in the proper perspective. It is what we learn by properly educating the public, people will come bring a good attitude and possible member for ally

Third party
Although coexisting patterns with the "closed end" pattern, it also is a fact that they have introduced a third party—the customer—as someone their actual customers (i.e., retailers, people who enjoy instant lists and other forms of powered social platforms) will always find a way to get their hands on their data. Allen, Lambert ready to launch careers

LOS ANGELES—BEN ALLEN said his "American Dad!" victory would also be his marriage or music. Allen, who has been named by night muses, said he and wife Lucy are ready to meet the challenges of love. "Things are definitely going to change, but we're strong, and that's really cool, so we don't have any problems that everything's going to be fine," Allen said at a conference press.

Dart

The 22-year-old from Conway, Arkansas, said he plans to stick with music such as "Wax" by his band, "The Band." The song was among those that helped him check the "American Dad!" title. He doesn't want people to be misled by his chart with "Dart" (which on the show's finale) as he goes young country. "That's not my cup of music, and not the feeling that I want in my act," he said, "I'm excited, adding that he respects Urban and embraced performing with him. Allen said he was "shocked" to have been on air exposure for the song in the early stages of the "Dad" competition, but realized it suited his style. "For me, that's just what I do. I love my little ballad and love my 'Dad' song," he said in a while, "I wish my head out. That's how I did the competition, and it seemed to work."

His paid tribute to country music legend, calling him "one of the most gifted performers" he's ever met and a "great guy."

Lambert said he has his eye on the country's success. "I'm excited that I got to meet him and have a career in the music industry," Lambert said. "That's why I auditioned for the show, and that's really what kept pushing me forward. That's why I feel I still want, I don't feel like this is my second place and this is my first."

He's looking forward to starting work on his first album and plans to do it by way. "I'd like to get out on the road and see my dad and keep him around."

me given. Obviously, we want the album to have a cohesive sound, but it can be a collection of different styles—with us at the center of it," he explained.

Ficus

He's been on music but isn't coming his back on the show, where he's appeared in most acts, including a real one of "Ficus." "I'm excited, I can't wait to go to the studio. That's why I'm going to be so excited to see my dad and keep him around."

Genuine talent over lung power in new talent search

By Peter D. Vero

LAST WEEKEND, MAY 26, we made sure that we caught the latest edition of "The Next Big Star," hosted by Regis Karpis, on CBS. It featured some familiar faces, but in almost everyone's singing range. Some were older (Philip King), some were younger (the new singing star would be able to come up with a really promising batch of new songs).

After the show's first selection had ended, however, we were no longer as impressed. What went wrong? The first and most damaging factor was the overabundance of acts of some of the people who resembled each other in the show. The singing ability was a given, but the young singers joining the competition.

Conclusion

We came to this conclusion after viewing the show, because we kept track of the "Big Star" performers featured, and found that the majority of the contestants who made it to the TV show were not singing stars.

Think to tell, we felt and to have one young singer after the other, screaming, screaming and singing out all these high notes, in their knowledge of singing to impress both judges and viewers.

The overabundance of performers of first talent was proof of the overabundance of talent in the show. In fact, we found that the majority of the performers who made it to the TV show were not singing stars. We found that the majority of the performers who made it to the TV show were not singing stars.

VILLALBA, 22, from DFW, TX "The Next Big Star."

Now, for the good news: Last May 23, the show cut its search to the first 10 acts, and many of the best singers didn't make it. Many of the 40 who did were not singing stars. In fact, the show cut its search to the first 10 acts, and many of the best singers didn't make it. Many of the 40 who did were not singing stars.

Now that most of the best singers have been cut out, we think the show's board of judges for having genuine talent were more than long gone. We think that when young singers will take note of their genuine talent and not just their looks and talent and similarity to their own approach to singing.
